Arsenal Women will remind Katie McCabe of her responsibilities on social media after she posted pictures from a beach in Dubai on Monday, on a trip which Telegraph Sport understands she claimed was made for business reasons. The Republic of Ireland international played arsenal on Sunday in their 4-0 win over Everton in the women's Super League. In his post-match press conference after the match, Arsenal manager Joe Montemurro stressed the importance of everyone in the club being professional and following government guidelines prohibiting travel outside the Level 4 zone, except for work. McCabe's Instagram story on Monday, which seemed to show him on the beach next to Dubai's iconic Burj Al Arab, is understood to have disappointed club officials because it has not clearly shown that the trip had anything to do with the job. Players and staff at other London clubs have told Telegraph Sport the post was disrespectful to many foreign WSL players living in Tier 4 areas who have cancelled their previously planned trip home to see their loved ones at Christmas because of restrictions. T&A: T C's Apply, 21+, Only CO Dec 1, 2020 By Matt Blunt VegasInsider.com Score Prediction: Pittsburgh 23 Baltimore 14 Best Bet: Under 41 suggested Thursday Night Football game was scheduled to play Tuesday Night Football and after another on-the-face, the NFL decided to move Pittsburgh and Baltimore to a rare Wednesday afternoon contest. Why play on Wednesday afternoon instead of primetime slot? Well, while we believe football is the king of television in America, and that's the most, the folks at NBC have already booked a Christmas In Rockefeller Center tree lighting special. Hit one Santa Claus! The Baltimore Ravens are in the midst of a viral issue right now, and it could end up being the end of their 2020 campaign because of it, and if you don't think so, then check out the injury report below. This huge re-convened by the Pittsburgh Steelers was supposed to give the Ravens a last shot at staying in the AFC North race, but with the way the next few weeks play out to Baltimore, they may even get a legitimate last shot even making the playoffs now. It's life in the NFL in 2020, though, as from a Denver Broncos perspective this week Baltimore has even been happy the NFL moved the game to them. Denver was not given such courtesy and was taken to take on shielda – so to speak without a legitimate quarterback on Sunday. So, after coughing up the first meeting with four turnovers and still having a pass broken in the end zone in the final game to win it, can Baltimore get any kind of redemption return games with the Steelers, or does Pittsburgh take a non-quarter with their embattled division contender and cruise to an 11-0 record? But it's also going to be a very different looking Ravens team we see on the field this time around, and waiting for any kind of similar success will be tough. Baltimore would love to protect the ball this time around because they had no problem moving the ball against the vaunted Steelers defense in that first game, they just couldn't hold on to it long enough for cash points. The success the Ravens had running the ball (265 rushing yards) can work as a positive in this game considering we could see Baltimore run the ball a lot to try and shorten the game. Shortening the game is the best chance Baltimore's got in this one because it's not like their own defense couldn't try to steal this thing either. Allowing 28 points after giving up just 221 total yards in that first game was a sore spot for this Ravens defense, even with seven of those points coming straight from the Steelers defense for a pick-six to open the scoring. I would expect them to pick up the challenge of trying to take this team from the start, but that may just be you so far in terms of trying to win the game. As for the total though, the form of this Baltimore magazine is it will lend itself to looking low on that total. Baltimore's going to bring a heavy dose to their running game in Pittsburgh again, and if they can continually move the chain that way like they did in the first meeting, the Steelers' time in possession here will be slim. It's going to be tough for Pittsburgh to cover the spread of these issues, or to do enough on the end for more bettors.

T&amp;amp;Amp;T C's Apply, 21+, Only CO Head-to-Head History Nov 1, 2020 - Pittsburgh 28 Baltimore 24, Steelers 4, Over December 29, 2019 - Baltimore 28 vs. Pittsburgh 10, Ravens +2, More than 35 Oct 6, 2019 – Baltimore 26 at Pittsburgh 23, Steelers +3.5, Over 44 Ravens vs. Steelers Handicapping Side You have to go all the way back to 10 meetings back between these two teams to find the last time one of them was catching double digits as Baltimore won 20-17 just like an 11-point home underdog back in late December 2015. Baltimore had a team that belonged in a turnover battle that day to +3 in the end, and they'll probably need to have multiple turnovers again this time around to have a shot at an outright victory. But covering a double-digit spread rivalry where Baltimore has only lost by double digits three times in Pittsburgh since the start of the 2005 season (34 games) is a much different matter no matter who the Ravens end up on the field with. QB Robert Griffin III has a lot of experience in this league, and with his skill set very similar to starter Lamar Jackson having him as a backup really allows the Ravens coaching staff to maintain the status quo in terms of what the game is easily available to use. Keeping things simple and executing (which you can accomplish) at a high level will be critical to any level of success Baltimore has here, and having RG III back is a much different circumstance than what Denver is dealing with this past week. But that blowout defeat to the Broncos suffered because COVID issues will find some common ground in the market with what might be the Steelers' love from start to finish for this game. Bettors will remember how easy a win it was by whatever number with the Saints on Sunday, and think it will be more of the same with Pittsburgh and their lofty number. I'm not so sure that will be the case for a rivalry game of this type, but with next to nothing during practice, and question marks, if all Ravens players even know each other, that is still worrying enough to move on from all this uncertainty and move on to another day. The forced choice side would have me cladding through all these points and Baltimore, but I believe the total is still a better way to go if only because of the chance of this game it will turn out to be similar to the Saints/Broncos game, where Pittsburgh cruises to a big lead and can just sit on the ball in the second half to let that clock bleed.
